Commentary:

We are lucky. We are blessed.

Economics teaches me, people's desires are unlimited while resources are limited.

Cambodian boy, one of the millions of children, has not ever tasted any toothpaste, neither in strawberry nor mint. It is so funny that we have the tradition of not sending shoes to others during birthday. However, they have their bare foot to go to school, buy food and play. Well, slippers are treasure.

It is pleased to see that the little girl on the left hand side is willing to help her father to have dental checks for over 200 children. However, this boy does not know who his father is. Died of AIDS? I do not know because he does not know too. You may say, there is no need to compare as everybody has different lives, and they do not want the so-called wealthy people to sympathize. "Yes" to some extent. While we understand that we are born in a blessed place with everything around, seldom do people treasure and be grateful. Instead we do our utmost to chase for unlimited fame, money, status and self-esteem. No one knows if we are happy, but I can tell you this boy did after the check and the brush. If we still do not be thankful and know how to appreciate, we are not the ones who are lucky and blessed, but them.
